

Supplement of

In vitro analysis of antiseptic solution effects on Staphylococcus aureus biofilms on orthopedic implant materials

Madison Balagtas et al.

Correspondence to: Madison Balagtas (mbalagtas@luc.edu)

The copyright of individual parts of the supplement might differ from the article licence.

A

B

Figure S1. Stainless steel coupons used in biofilm experiments.

(A) Coupon holder containing stainless steel coupons used in the CDC biofilm reactor. (B) Representative stainless steel coupon following removal from the reactor system. Coupons served as the substrate for MSA biofilm formation and subsequent antiseptic exposure experiments.